

Travel Alert
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE

March 02, 2012

The Department of State alerts U.S. citizens to the continued potential for unrest and civil disturbances in Senegal prior to and directly following the second round of voting in the Presidential elections scheduled for March 25. While the first round of voting on February 26 proceeded peacefully, there were several violent demonstrations in the preceding weeks. The potential for demonstrations still continues in the run up to the second round and directly after as results are announced. There is no evidence that foreign citizens are being targeted for violence. This Travel Alert expires April 30, 2012.

U.S. citizens planning to travel to Senegal during and immediately following the second round of voting should monitor local news, assess local conditions and travel routes, and consult the Embassy's website for Emergency Messages to U.S. Citizens when making travel plans. U.S. citizens should avoid political gatherings and consider altering routes to avoid areas where demonstrations are likely to occur.

U.S. citizens in Senegal should be aware of their surroundings at all times and use caution when moving around. U. S. citizens should avoid crowds, demonstrations, political rallies, and spontaneous gatherings in Senegal. We remind U.S. citizens that even demonstrations intended to be peaceful can turn confrontational and possibly escalate into violence between demonstrators and/or local law enforcement. U.S. citizens should avoid areas of demonstrations and exercise caution in the event they find themselves in the vicinity of a demonstration.

For U.S. citizens already in Senegal, the U.S. Embassy also recommends that you take this opportunity to ensure that passports for all family members are up to date.
